egain, when I was struck by a club on the head and knocked down. I managed to get up and crawl up the steps of a house, where I remained till the procession passed by.

"The janitor of the house said he saw a man steal up through the crowd with a club, and he struck me, swinging it with both hands. I had not ceased to cry 'thief' and 'police' from the time I was robbed.

"I was laid up for five days. Such an assault would have killed some men. I wonder how I escaped:

"I reported the matter at Police Head-Quarters, and although they were very polite to me, they never succeeded in finding out who my assaliant was."

Mr. Meredith said the police ascertained that the procession was that of the Wellington Chowder Club. There was a crowd of about 399 people in front of the procession, and these, the witness thought, were organized for the purpose of assaulting and robbing all strangers they met. etrangers they met.

Dunn was then placed on the witness stand. He claimed that he was taking an excise prisoner to the statiot, together with Policeman Keeley, of Inspector McAvoy's staff, when he was attacked from behind by Lucas. "A man named McCue was with Lucas, and he attacked Policeman Keeley. Lucas and I rolled in the gutter together, and I was compelled to draw my club to defend myself. The barkeeper, who came along with us, was a witness of the assault. Keeley arrested McCue."

ployment to Many People.

Kauri gum digging is an industry peculiar to New Zealand, though copai gum, the product of an African forest tree, is product of an African forest tree, is producted in a very similar manner. The gum is the hardened sap or rosin of the kauri pine and is found imbedded in the earth of mooriands, where the soil is light and clayey. Such soil contains pieces of hardened gum, varying from mere fragments to blocks as large as a man's body, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, it is just below the surface of the ground, or at a depth of from six to twelve feet. The land which contains it is usually poor and bleak, though the gum sometimes occurs in growing kauri forests, especially around the roots of old or dead kauris. Curiously, the sap or rosin of the living trees is not of any value, being too soft. It must be buried underground for many years before-it-acquires the hardness necessary to fit it for the market.

The gum as it is dug up is in a semi-fossilized condition and is found wherever in past ages kauri forests grew, and of course the existing kauri forests are making deposits which will be useful in years to come. It is very like amber in appearance and in general qualities, though it is not so beautiful or valuable. Clear or prettily marked pieces are often made into brooches, earlings or other small ornaments, but they are too brittle to be of much value. In color the gum varies from a pale yellow to a brown or even jet black, and, like amber, is clear or clouded. Naturally enough, a substance so like amber or used in various compositions made to counterfeit that beautiful product. The clearer it is the more highly per is often fraudilently passed off as ber or used in various compositions in to counterfeit that beautiful prot. The clearer it is the more highly a sesteemed. In the three years from 1870 to 1872 inclusive, the amount exported was very large, being about 15,000 tons, valued at 12,500,000. From 1853 to 1880 inclusive the total output was about 70,000 tons, valued at more than $10,000,00. The price of gum varies considerably, according to its density, clearness, hardness and other qualities, but the average price is about $215 a ton.

density, clearness, qualities, but the average price is about $215 a ton.

The land, which is now covered with terns, was once clothed with kauri forests, but how long ago the forests died, and how old they were when they died is very hard to tell. The work of gun digging is arduous, and the hours o labor, especially in Summer, are long.

DEFECTIVE PLUMBING.

It Is Said to Breed Disease in the Summer.

The evils attending the heat of Summer, unless sanitary measures are rigidly enforced, are too well known to need recital, says the National Building Register. The prompt and regular collection of all garbage and the possession of a properly-constructed sewerage system are questions second only in importance to domestic plumbing. The municipal authorities may make wise use of any appropriation for sanitary purposes, but it remains largely with the owner or landlord to aid and assist by maintaining a perfect working of the plumbing system in the home or office building. The direct cause of most of the prevalent ills and complaints of Summer is often found to be due to defective plumbing, and the importance of having every prescaution taken to insure complete sanitation in this connection is too great to be negligently dealt with.

Whenever it may become apparent that sure complete sanitation in this connection is too great to be negligently dealt with.

Whenever it may become apparent that any of the plumbing devices are not working properly, steps should immediately be taken to secure the prompt services of a plumber to correct the defects. Sewer gas, the gases arising from stagnant and polluted water, and the deadly poisons from imperfect drainage are the evils that menare the household and the general community whenever procrastination supersedes discretion and watchfulness. The location of your homes may be regarded as particularly healthful and the surroundings may be all that could be desired, but these will avait nothing if, through parsimony or neglect, the interior plumbing system, is allowed to become imperfect. The city may spend millions of dollars for completing a perfect system of sewers, but it must be remembered that these sewers carry off only what empties into them.

It is the duty of the house owner to see that the domestic plumbing system performs its work perfectly, and it then becomes the duty of those in charge of municipal affairs to see to it that proper sewerage facilities are provided for carrying off ail drainage received from Gilroy Declares There's No Deal.

Mayor Gilroy said to-day:
"Such a thing as a deal between Tammany and the State Democracy has not been considered and will not be considered, so far as I know. That is all I propose to say about the Tammany Campaign Committee of Eight appointed by the Tammany Executive Committee, and the consequent reports that he had been ousted from the leadership of Tammany Hall, the Mayor said:

Senator Saxton, Republican candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, was caught coming out of Mr. Thomas Platt's office, where he had doubtless been discussing with the Republican leader the surprising new features that the local fight has developed. He said:

"There is no doubt whatever in my mind that the Grace-Fairchild people are going back on all their past utterances, threats and promises.

"I am satisfied that they are working might and main with and for the Tammany crowd, in the hope of securing something for themselves. Their actions will not, in my opinion, have any effect on the Republican State ticket.

It might go further in the interest of harmony.

He said, however, that no general as he knew, and that a local arrange as he knew, and that a local arrange ment was confronted with great difficulties, the State Democrary having declared itself emphatically against compromise upon the offices of the city of New York.

That has been the practice in the past, and he, "and might be again in the future, to escape embarrassing the National party over New York differences by agreeing upon Congressment and avoiding the placing of two Democratic Congressional candidates in the field of any one district.

That this will be done again is a matter of present consideration, but all rother forms of compromise and agreement are still matters of report and conjecture."
